Those who are in the dieting industry and related fields, as well as professional medical clinicians, know that weight loss is a hard and complex struggle. In many cases, weight loss is the best way to deal with chronic conditions and prevent major health threats, even those that can be potentially fatal. At the same time, lifestyle changes may not accomplish the results that a patient needs.

The Reshape gastric balloon is a specifically designed medical device that improves the process of gastric control for those who need to lose weight, but can't achieve it with dieting or lifestyle change. A Reshape balloon procedure works to actively control the stomach, in order to help put a patient on the path to better health and longevity.

What is a Reshape Gastric Balloon?

The Reshape gastric balloon, which is popular with balloon weight loss surgery, is a device that gets installed in the stomach, so that a patient feels fuller after smaller meals. This is a method of weight loss that's less invasive than surgery, and often more practical and effective than some other kinds of treatment. When doctors find that dieting or other tactics are not working to control a patient's weight, he or she might consider whether a gastric control device might help, depending on a patient's age, body mass index, and many other factors.

A Double Balloon

The unique Reshape gastric balloon system contains a double balloon -- two separate elements that both extend inside the stomach to control appetite and promote weight loss. This double solution has a higher filling capacity than a single balloon system, and is FDA approved for weight loss treatment.

The Reshape gastric balloon is made to be used along with diet and exercise for those with a body mass index of 30 to 40 or more. It can generally stay in place for up to six months, to help patients deal with weight loss challenges.

Warnings and Side Effects
